In a world full of problems, do you want to be part of the solution?

Climate change and environmental degradation. Food scarcity and epidemic disease. Entrenched poverty and social exclusion. Refugee displacement and forced migration. The world is full of stubborn challenges and fierce inequalities. Do you want a career where you can make a difference, while continuing to study here in Arizona?

As a student in the University of Arizona’s Master’s in Development Practice (MDP) Program, you’ll gain the knowledge, insights, skills, and experiences to work in the demanding but rewarding field of sustainable development, both internationally and with communities within the U.S.

Our 22-month program of study combines natural resources, social justice, public health, social sciences, and management training, along with an intensive summer Field Practicum at a global location of your choice.

Graduates of the UA MDP are employed in countries around the world, and around the U.S., with grassroots communities, large non-governmental organizations (NGOs), private businesses, international institutions, and governments at the national, regional, and local levels. Our alumni work in East Africa, Latin America, Southeast Asia, and Europe, as well as nearby in Arizona, California, and Sonora, Mexico.

THE UA MDP IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR FALL 2020
Visit: GlobalMDP.arizona.edu or contact us at MDPAdmissions@email.arizona.edu
The MDP Summer Field Practicum

During the summer between their two years of study, MDP students are immersed in a hands-on Field Practicum in their area of concentration and at a destination chosen in consultation with MDP faculty.

Practicum sites have included Kenya, Cambodia, Sierra Leone, Nicaragua, Philippines, Zambia, Ethiopia, Rwanda, Haiti, the Bahamas, Swaziland, Bangladesh, and the Dominican Republic. Practicums have also been conducted in Arizona, California, native American reservations, the Mexican state of Sonora, and Washington DC.

Practicum topics have included the health of farmers, youth decision-making, impacts of climate change, women’s empowerment, natural resource management, wildlife conservation, technology and innovation, community health, behavioral change, collaborative development, prisoners’ rights, refugee resettlement, food security, farming practices, land conservancies, and protection of the oceans.

Practicum partner organizations have included large non-governmental organizations (NGOs), small grassroots organizations, United Nations programs, government agencies, and for-profit organizations. The UA MDP also has strong linkages with the Tucson-based global development organization TANGO, and many of our students have conducted practicums based in Southern Arizona and are employed here in community development work.

To learn more, visit: GlobalMDP.arizona.edu or contact us at MDPAdmissions@email.arizona.edu

UA Master’s in Development Practice (MDP)